

If we look toward the future, I believe that most scholarship will be done via Forums on list-servs. The response time between idea and criticism is immediate. Also there are many on-line journals. I believe that these will proliferate due not only to economic factors, but again to the ease of distribution and response. Articles take a year to appear in printed journals (if you are lucky), books take much longer.

We should have at least one (or several) specialists available to help the faculty develop such international on -line forums and on-line journals.
