College of Science researchers examine bat behavior

From a joint project between the College of Science and the College of Agriculture, research teams at LSU are studying the natural behavior of bats to learn about their foraging and the potential use of their echolocation in man-made ultrasonic systems.

Geology, Geophysics make mark at GSA 2011

On November 14, 2011, the LSU College of Science hosted a luncheon to celebrate the first-year anniversary of the LSU Geophysics and Geology Program. Delegates from the College of Science, Geology and Geophysics, and Geology and Geophysics faculty members were present and enjoyed the special luncheon.

Student Philanthropy Council earns praise for letter-writing campaign

The Student Philanthropy Council of the College of Science has earned praise for a recent letter-writing campaign aimed at education in the LSU. The Student Philanthropy Council is part of the LSU Student Alumni Association and is sponsored by the LSU Alumni Association.

LSU life sciences researchers get $2 million to understand hedgehog signaling

In a significant breakthrough for cancer research, researchers at LSU have discovered how the hedgehog signaling pathway works in the development of cancer.

New Planned Giving Commitments

To submit news items for the upcoming College of Science newsletter, send them to djenkins1@lsu.edu.